

Hazmat Called to Remove Body from Suspected Chemical Suicide

Web Staff, KDVR Denver
November 29, 2009

DENVER - Police called in a hazmat team Sunday to remove the body of a man found dead in a car downtown.

Polices say the male found dead in the car on Tennessee near Huron was a suspected suicide. Because of the method of suicide there was concern about a substance in the car. Denver Fire hazmat was called as a precaution.

No one else was injured in the incident.

Denver Fire said the substance was labeled as "Hydrogen Sulfide" a toxic compound used in the seperation of metals.

Authorities removed the body from the car and crews resealed the car. It will be impounded, until it is determined how police want the car dealt with and what is needed to neutralize the substance.

Source: <http://www.kdvr.com/news/kdvr-carsuicide-112909,0,6856876.story>

Police called in a hazmat team Sunday to remove the body of a man found dead in a car downtown.